- In fiscal year 2007, there were 14,034 admissions of Baltimore City residents to publicly funded inpatient and outpatient drug treatment programs in the state of Maryland. This is a decline of more than 2500 admissions from a peak of 16,556 admissions in FY 2004. In 2006, just over two-thirds of all admissions among Maryland residents to Maryland drug and alcohol treatment centers were publicly funded.

*There is not a direct correlation between the number of slots and funding amount per year—the composition of slots (in terms of cost and type) changes from year to year. Also a single slot can be filled by more than one individual—i.e. one individual in the first 6 months of the year, and another in the second 6 months.

- Since FY1998, funding to Baltimore City's publicly funded substance abuse treatment programs has increased by 86%. The number of treatment slots have increased by 26% during this same time period.
